THE DIRIGO HOTEL.—In another column will be seen an advertisement of the Dirigo Hotel at Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, of which Frank Jellerson is the proprietor. There is not a place on the Lake where one can get more wholesome food, cleaner rooms, better beds or closer attention to your wants. The hotel is situated on high ground but five minutes' walk from the wharf, where the sewerage is perfect, and a grand view of the Lake can be obtained. Hammocks are swung in the shade of the tall pines, and a spacious lawn is growing around the premises, squared off by fine gravel walks. The culinary department is under the direct supervision of Frank's sister, who spares nothing in her efforts to please the guests and makes everybody feel at home inside of fifteen minutes. She is doubly able to administer to guests whether they be sick or healthy. Everything gives the best of satisfaction, though the rates charged by Mr. Jellerson occasion considerable comment, as they don't appear to be high enough to give the proprietor any margin for profit. It is cheaper to stay there than live at home, and you will be just as well satisfied.

Death of Mrs. W. D. Keyser.—Last evening, shortly after 9 o'clock Mrs. W. D. Keyser died suddenly at her residence. Her husband, two sons and a daughter are left to grieve, and the sympathy of the community goes out to them in their great affliction.

A BROKEN DAM.

WM. PRICE RUINED BY A BURSTED RESERVOIR.

How the Flood Came Down the Ravine.

On Sunday afternoon at about quarter of 5 o'clock, Price's reservoir at the foot of Slide Mountain burst, and the water rushing down the canyon submerged the V. & T. track at Franktown, causing a delay of the passenger train, which returned to Carson for the night.

SCENE OF THE BREAK.

Slide Mountain takes its name from the fact that some years ago about half the mountain caved away and fell into the valley.

The land slide occurred in the night, and it was believed that a band of Mormon emigrants camping at the foot of the mountain were buried in the debris, but the story has never been authenticated.

The convulsion of nature left a hollow place that was utilized by W. E. Price as a site for water storage. He turned a mountain stream into the depression and dammed the lower end.

This gave him a lake three miles long, half a mile wide and seventy-five feet deep. Below this he made another reservoir covering about five acres of land, with the water fifteen feet deep.

These two reservoirs are situated about three miles from the V. & T. R. R. track at an elevation of about two thousand feet.

Leading from the reservoirs is a ravine through which a flume runs. The flume was used for fluming ice and water from the reservoirs. Mr. Price's is at the foot of the flume and here are his barns, residence and ice houses. The improvements and reservoirs are valued at $25,000.

A FEARFUL SIGHT.

Some of Price's men were in the ravine at work on the flume, when they heard a roar like a train of cars coming. As they looked up the ravine they saw a wall of water thirty feet high and one hundred feet across, coming down the ravine. From base to crest it was as white as marble, and at the summit it carried a load of logs and boulders.

As the ends lashed and writhed against the sides of the narrow ravine it licked up everything in its path. Fallen trees, underbrush and rocks were sucked into the swirl, and above all was a roar that shook the earth.

A RACE FOR LIFE.

There were three men in the ravine at a point where the sides were too steep to climb, and the only means of escape were down the path about three hundred yards.

The instant the wall of water flashed in sight at the turn of the ravine they dropped everything and fled down the rocky path.

The water was several hundred yards away but gaining at a fearful pace. There was a narrow point in its path where the rocks jutted out from the sides. Here it paused for a few seconds as the accumulation of logs and boulders were caught in the jam, but weight of water piled up behind soon amounted to thousands of tons, and with a crash the temporary obstruction fell away and the water cleared a hundred feet at one leap.

The three men who were just ahead were nephews of Price, and they think that this temporary checking of the downward sweep of the flood saved their lives.

They reached a spot where they could climb to higher ground, and they barely did so when the water shot past them with a rush and only a few feet below them.

Reaching the hill they tried to sound the alarm to those below, but were too far away.

A COURIER SENT DOWN.

At this point, however, they found a band of gypsies and one who had a fast horse was sent down to warn Price of his danger. He had to go a round-about way about two miles and reached the ranch too late to be of any service.

Price, however, had seen the water coming and got his family out of the house in time. The foot of the ravine is about half a mile from the house and the water spread out as soon as it ceased to be confined, spreading over about twenty-five acres of land.

It swept away the barn, rose above the lower floors of the house went through the ice-house and then covered the railroad track with debris for about five hundred yards.

The down passenger train which contained an extra quota of ladies and children en route to Reno to attend some school exercises, was delayed until nearly midnight when all efforts to clear the track failed and the train returned to Carson.

CLEARING THE TRACK.

When the news of the break reached Carson, men were sent down on a construction train to clear the track. It was covered with logs and boulders and the water was flowing over it. In about an hour the water stopped and the men were able to work, but suddenly there came another rush of drift-wood, water and boulders and covered the track again. When the second rush came, it was supposed that the upper lake dam had broken.

The water subsided and came down again at intervals all right and the men who were at work, about thirty, gave up exhausted about three in the morning. There was also a gang of twenty Chinamen higher up the creek cutting a new channel to divert the torrent by removing boulders, but did not succeed and in the morning the boulders were blown out with giant powder. This accomplished the desired result and by noon the track was clear.

At the present time it is not known for certain whether the big reservoir is broken or only partially so.

Big aves came down at intervals but smaller than at first. The place is inaccessible except by the ravine and no one dared go up.

The dam was never regarded as strongly constructed and Price has always feared high water. The water which escaped has flowed into Washoe Lake and now men are guarding the Washoe dam for fear of a break.

Several years ago a dam broke near the present one and nearly wiped out Franktown.
